

Begin at the Anchor in Commonwealth Reserve.

1 Commonwealth Reserve

Known originally as 'The Mud Flats' the reserve was created by Harbour Trust dredging of shipping channels, between 1880 and 1930. In the reserve are remnants of Williamstown's maritime past: the Tide Gauge House, built in 1860 and removed from Breakwater Pier and the anchor from the Victorian naval ship Nelson.

2 Gem Pier

First jetty here was completed in 1839. The pier is named after the 'Gem' Ferry which took passengers between Williamstown and Port Melbourne.

3 Memorial Drinking Fountain

(Corner Syme Street and Nelson Place).

Named after Rev George Wilkinson, a strict teetotaler, and first vicar at Holy Trinity Church, Nelson Place.

Cross Syme Street.

4 Customs House, 128 Nelson Place

Built in 1874–1875 and designed by William Wardell. The Port Phillip Pilot Service, formed 1852, had offices at the rear of the Customs House.

5 Nelson Place Shops

First land sales here were in 1837, however most buildings date from 1870 onwards.

6 139 Nelson Place

Former E.S. and A Bank designed by Leonard Terry and built in 1873 in the Gothic (church-like) Revival style.

7 Craigantina Building, 125–129 Nelson Place

Built in 1886 for J.H. Craig, a local stationery seller.

Walk east along Nelson Place.

8 Former Royal Hotel, 85 Nelson Place

The first hotel here was the Royal Oak, built in 1852. The present building was constructed in 1893 in what was then the popular Queen Anne or Jacobean styling identifiable by combination of red brick and cream or white details.

9 Williamstown Morgue

The first inquests into drowning etc were held in pubs. After several publicans objected, the morgue was constructed in 1859. It was moved here in 1873 and closed in 1925.

10 Former Port of Melbourne Authority Piers and Workshops

The Port of Melbourne Authority took over the duties of the old Melbourne Harbour Trust which was formed in 1877 and was responsible for managing and maintaining the port, harbour lights and shipping channels.
